

Business School Or Law School

Business School Or Law School - Law school is three years long; business school is two years. So the opportunity cost of going to a law school is much larger, but most elite business schools also require two to five years of work experience and rarely take applicants directly from their undergraduate schools. Should I go to law school or business school? Update Cancel. a d b y E v e n t b r i t e. Looking to simplify your operations and reach new audiences? ... I would like to go to Law School and Business School, which should be first? Which law school should I go to? Related Questions. Cost v. Value. Comparing costs is difficult because of the wide range of schools and tuition levels, but in the end, law school is three years and business school is only two years.